Overview

Monitoring and evaluation (M&E) is a powerful public management tool that can be used to improve the way governments and organizations achieve results and are becoming ever more important in today's business and government landscape.

Over the past two decades there has been a broad shift towards evidence-based decision making, with the public sector being no exception to this shift. Until relatively recently, implementation-based monitoring and evaluation (focussed mainly around monitoring inputs and outputs) predominated, particularly in public sector management.

There has been an evolution in the field of monitoring and evaluation involving a movement away from traditional implementation-based approaches toward new results-based approaches. A results-based system provides feedback on the actual outcomes and goals of government action

This broad approach aims to combine implementation-based monitoring with results, impact or performance monitoring. It is a powerful public management tool that can be used to help policymakers and decision-makers track progress and demonstrate the impact of a given project, programme, or policy.

This one week programme will empower participants to understand, direct and implement the phases of a robust and results-based M&E framework, develop and structure a clear reporting processes that provides valuable information for management decision-making at all levels and develop and structure clear reporting processes that provides valuable information for management decision-making at all levels

Course objective

The objective of this course is to cover both the areas of monitoring and evaluation and reporting in detail, not from a theoretical perspective, but from a practical point of view.

At the end of the course the participants should be able to apply this in their working environments.

This programme is a mine of useful information on organizational performance measurement practice, logically presented and allied to practical guidance and expert tips on what to consider in refining or developing a results-based monitoring & evaluation system
